

In this image released by New Line Cinema, Chris Noth stars as Mr. Big, left, and Sarah Jessica Parker stars as Carrie Bradshaw in New Line Cinema's "Sex and the City". (AP Photo/New Line Cinema, Craig Blankenhorn)

Book from 'Sex and the City' film doesn't exist

1 day ago

NEW YORK (AP) — A consumer alert for the millions who have seen the "Sex and the City" movie: There is no such book as "Love Letters of Great Men," which Carrie Bradshaw reads while in bed with Mr. Big.

The closest text in the real world apparently is "Love Letters of Great Men and Women: From the Eighteenth Century to the Present Day," first released in the 1920s and reissued last year by Kessinger Publishing, which specializes in bringing back old works.

Richard Davies, press manager for AbeBooks.com, an online seller that features used titles, told The Associated Press on Tuesday that he has received hundreds of queries about the book's existence.

Enough readers have been directed to the Kessinger anthology, on AbeBooks and elsewhere on the Internet, that it ranked No. 134 on Amazon.com on Tuesday afternoon.

In "Sex and the City," an early scene shows Carrie (Sarah Jessica Parker) poring over the imaginary collection, although citing real letters by Beethoven and Napoleon among others. Big (Chris Noth) later takes passages from the book as he expresses his love, by e-mail, to Carrie.

(This version CORRECTS title in lead and 2nd graf to 'Love Letters of Great Men,' sted 'From Great Men.' CORRECTS time element to Tuesday. Moving on entertainment and financial services. AP Video.)

